

The journal titles that the Ministry of Science wants to hide from the public

Sprogmuseet.dk has obtained the ranked lists of scientific journals that the Ministry of Science wants to keep secret.

The Ministry had asked hundreds of scientists from all disciplines to come up with a list of all scientific journals. Ten percent were to be ranked top journals: publishing in those would provide more money for the universities. After a few days already, the lists were removed from the Ministry's website, because they met with sharp criticism in the media. Sprogmuseet.dk now reveals which of the the language-related journals are ranked highest.

We compiled a list of the linguistic journals that are ranked 2, i.e. the higher ranked journals. The journal list contains some 18.000 scientific journals, of which some 2.800 have received the higher ranking, and the rest ranking 1. We estimate that there are all in all some 1.000 journals on linguistics, and I have searched through the higher-ranked linguistics journals using the following search strings:

- LANG, LING, SPR, PHILOL, FILOL, PHON, FON, MORPH, TICS, LEX, DIAL

For Scandinavia also:

- SCAN, SKAN, DAN, NORDI

In addition, I spotted some additional journals with titles like Diachronica, which I of course added, but I have not systematically browsed all of the 2800 high ranked journals to find all top-ranked linguistic journals.

The lists were criticized in the short period they were available for the general public, for favoring English-language journals and for discriminating against publications in the Danish language. With nine Scandinavian journals in the top list (6%), and 30 additional journals in languages other than English (20%), I think this criticism is exaggerated, with a quarter of the journals in non-English languages.

There are 150 linguistic journals on the top list. Of course I do not know all of them, and there will probably be errors in my selection. In my view this list provides a wide choice of journals for preferred publication.

It is easy to criticize the choice that the linguistics committee has made – and any other committee would have been criticized, for mostly similar reasons. Here are some of those points of criticism.

1. Some choices for particular titles are arbitrary: for instance, high quality journals on creoles, Amerindian and Oceanic languages are listed, but none at all on, for example, Sinitic, Arabic, Tibeto-Burman or African languages, some of which have the same quality as the listed ones.
2. The list of top journals contains some periodicals that I at least have never heard of and seem rather idiosyncratic. What about Language Resources and Evaluation or Iconicity in Language and Literature? Never heard of, and quite specialized.
3. The only journal specialized on Latin in the top list is on medieval rather than classical Latin: Filologia Mediolatina: Rivista della Fondazione Ezio Franceschini. Also a title that does not seem to rock the world when a huge scientific breakthrough is revealed there.
4. Some are not journals but book series titles: Current Issues in Linguistic Theory, Pragmatics and Beyond New Series. And also, it appears, Iconicity in Language and Literature.
5. Not all fields are represented proportionally. Some fields of research have all the journals in their field listed (at least as far as I know), such as sign language studies: both existing journals are listed in the top list, and the same is probably true for gender and language issues with two journals top-ranked. For historical linguistics, a much wider field, only two journals are listed as high quality journals, but in this field there are many more journals. No periodical about the history of linguistics is listed as a number-2 journal, but four lexicographic journals are.
6. The full list, even though it is the most complete list of journals that I am aware of, is far from complete. It contains many more journals than the famous "Norwegian" lists and the one compiled by a committee at the European level, even when put together. I know that because I have myself provided input to the committee for linguistics, until I was tired of it and after having added perhaps one hundred titles of journals from a source to an earlier list of linguistic journals that the committee had. I quit adding when I reached the letter M when the feeling of executing useless work became overwhelming. I do not want to look for these missing titles now. Instead, I can give an impression of how much is missing by comparing the Directory/Annuaire of the Canadian Association of Learned Journals and the Ministry's list. In this Directory, 18 journals beginning with "Canadian" are listed. One of those received a ranking "2", 13 received a ranking "1" and four are missing from the Ministry's list, that is, almost a quarter. There is no reason to believe that this is not representative. One of the best Danish journals, Dansk Talesprog, is for example lacking completely from the Danish lists.
7. Quite a few journals in the 1-list are listed several times in the list: Rask, Nieuwe Westindische Gids/NWIG. Or, outside linguistics: Rangeland Ecology & Management, and several others. OK, some apparently have two sets of ISSN numbers, but not all of them do.
8. One can find publications in the list such as 0267-5498 Linguistics Abstracts, but this journal just publish abstracts of articles published elsewhere, they do not accept submissions.

Whoever would have been on the committee, would have made omissions and errors, which is unavoidable in such a gigantic task. On the positive side: the Ministry had said that 10 % of the journals could be top-ranked. If my estimates are correct, the actual percentage of journals ranked "2" is actually 50 % higher, namely a little over 15 %.

Despite these criticisms, I am probably more positive about the list than many other university teachers/researchers. Such lists will always disappoint some people. Like all other researchers, I wonder why certain good journals are excluded and other unknown ones are included. In contrast to some other lists, however, this list does not favour particular theoretical frameworks, or publications in a certain language, or geographical areas. From this place, I like to congratulate the committee with the results. If the other fields are covered in a similarly representative way, it is not bad at all.

Technical information

In the alphabetical list below, the first number is the code given to the journal by the Ministry. The second set of numbers, eight digits with a hyphen in the middle, are ISSN numbers, the international codes for serial publications.

Thank you, Per-Åke Lindblom, for your question. I answer in English for our international visitors.

Searching LENG, SPA, PORT, SLO, YAZ, JAZ, RUS, NYELV in the list brought us six more (more or less) linguistic journals:

- 8017 1475-3839 Bulletin of Hispanic Studies (Print Edition. Liverpool, 2002)
- 3954 0355-1253 Finnisch-Ugrische Forschungen
- 2397 0021-6941 Język Polski
- 22169 0153-0313 Lengas
- 55417 0025-0228 Magyar Nyelv
- 68009 0025-0236 Magyar Nyelvok
- 1769 0037-7031 Slovo a Slovesnost

As far as I could see, there is NOTHING in Portuguese, Russian, Spanish in the top list. Quite surprising, actually. It could be that the Revista de Estudios Hispánicos (ranked 2) sometimes publishes linguistic articles, but I do not know the journal, I think it is purely devoted to literature. The first one on the list seems to be the only hispanic journal on the list.

Even though these three global languages are NOT represented in the top list of linguistics journals, the Catalan journal Lengas is! And there is at least one Polish Journal, one Czech Journal and two in Hungarian in the top list. This can be interpreted in a positive way: the minor and new languages of the EU are stimulated, at the expense of the languages of former colonial powers.

I don't know how to look for Chinese journals. This page:

<http://www.scimagojr.com/journalrank.php?category=3310>

list (only) 74 linguistic journals, but none of them is published in China.

This is a Taiwanese ranking of linguistic journals:

http://homepage.ntu.edu.tw/~gilntu/data/info/Journals%20Ranking\_950421.RTF

In this list, a handful of journals in Chinese are found. I assume at all journals here are highly-ranked (even though some obvious ones are lacking).

Finally, I had missed this one as well for the earlier list, with ranking 2:

- 2537 0019-7262 Indogermanische Forschungen

Hej, tack för ditt svar. Jag gjorde en sökning på Google på spanska -sökord: "revistas lingüistas". Jag fann åtminstone fyra lingvistiska tidskrifter – de två övriga tycks också innehålla artiklar om lingvistik. Jag kan inte bedöma tidskrifternas vetenskapliga kvalitet. Det finns säkert fler tidskrifter, om man undersöker saken närmare.

Hello, thanks for your answer. I made a search with Google in Spanish – search word: "revistas lingüistas". I found at least four journals on linguistics. The other seem also to contain articles about linguistics. I can not judge the scientific quality of the mentioned journals. There are certainly more linguistic journals in Spanish, but then you have to dig even deeper.
